The state of Rhode Island has filed a claim of appeal to the supreme court from the decree of the superior court entered several weeks ago in the case of States of Rhode Island vs. Frank W. Coy Real Estate company and others whereby the bill in equity brought by the state was dismissed. The bill in equity sought to restrain the respondents from closing up that portion of the new Shore road in Westerly passing through the lot of the respondents, and it was claimed that the respondents had dedicated the land to public use and were estopped to deny that the state was given permission to enter upon the land and construct a highway. The respondents denied this and the case was heard by Justice Harrows at Westerly last February.
